Long Center for the Performing Arts

Austin's 1950's-era Palmer Auditorium was recycled in the true spirit of sustainable design to become the Long Center for the Performing Arts, Austin's home for symphony, opera and ballet. The arts complex includes a 2,300 seat concert hall and a 240 seat studio theater. The ring beam and columns of old Palmer remain as a remembrance of past performances and serve to define the new "City Terrace" or front porch of the new facility.
